Portraits and Their Lives

Portraits are important in the documentation of a civilization whether they are traditional or contemporary. This exhibition looks at how artists from the 19th century to the present have portrayed themselves and those around them and how these portraits are connected to a time and place.

Artists in the exhibition include Joan Augustino, Martha Cahoon (1905-1999), Ralph Cahoon (1910-1982), D. Davis (1910-1991), Harold C. Dunbar (1882-1957), Axel Wilhelm Farham, Erastus Salisbury Fields (1805-1900), O.R. Fowler, Taylor Fox, William Horace Littlefield (1902-1969), Elizabeth Mumford, Noel Rockmore (1928-1995), Paul Schulenburg and Jerome Thompson (1814-1886). The works are from the collections of the artists, Cahoon Museum of American Art, Shirley Marvin and the Sandwich Glass Museum.

Portraits in the exhibition begin in the early 1800's with the portraits of Levi and Grace Doty by an unknown artist. Even though the artist is unknown, the viewer has these incredible portraits which show their true lives. Levi Doty was a partner in the ill-fated Falmouth Glass Company, in operation from 1850 to July 1851 on Shore Street in Falmouth. This glass-blowing factory produced such objects as clear pharmaceutical containers, bar glasses, lamps and fish bowls, purple cologne bottles, and green tumblers.

Unknown artist, Captain Levi F. Doty, c. 1828, oil on canvas, 13 x 11 inches

FRANCESCA CARRIUOLO APPRECIATION

Francesca Carriuolo and Bunny Stevens at “Shall We Dance?”, a Cahoon Museum fundraiser

Giving a final salute to our dear and wonderful trustee, Francesca Carriuolo, who died August 31st has been achingly sad for the Cahoon. In these past years, Francesca has been an underwriter for many exhibitions and the honorary chairwoman for three Cahoon Galas, the last in July at the Wianno Club where she presented “Shall We Dance?” and garnered more than $100,000 for the museum. Who will ever forget her dancing the cha cha across the dance floor with a handsome young man in her arms. She said to all of her close friends that this gala was her final salute and unfortunately, her predication was all too true. Francesca died at her home in Cotuit with her two close friends chatting with her as she planned her next birthday party in Monaco.

For all of us who had the great privilege to know Francesca, we learned that wherever she was, Francesca made things happen. There was a blessing in Capri with friends, careening around in an open air jeep on the way to the church.

A beautiful stint in a home on the Amalfi Coast in Italy. Her superb dinner parties at her home on Oceanview Avenue and Boston, her pride in her Italian heritage and her amazing ability to whip together a feast without any support of a recipe. No garlic, lots of basil and olive oil.

We, at the Cahoon, have so much to be grateful to Francesca for her relentless fund raising and her deep dedication to this wonderful museum that she felt was very important to Cotuit and the arts community on Cape Cod. She gave her heart to us and now, we salute her as she dances on to her next adventure. Rest well our tireless worker. You are forever in our thoughts and prayers.

Other portraits, for example by the artist Paul Schulenburg, show Provincetown artists. Paul explains about the artist Michael Davis that he “is someone who could often be seen painting in the streets. He’s a friendly personable guy. I sometimes wondered how he managed to be so prolific. He often would be engaged in conversation with a random passersby, all the while working on a plein-air masterpiece.”

The viewer can also experience two Ralph Cahoon portraits where Ralph has captured the flavor and atmosphere of the sitter in his own whimsical way. One wonderful example is Ralph’s “Bon Appétit” where Julia Child has become a mermaid. Other outstanding Ralph Cahoon works include “A Barnstable Couple”, “Portrait of Ship Captain’s Wife & Husband”, “Edwin Mycock, Attorney” and Bernard Kelly, Jeweler”.

Come join us and discover the narratives behind the portraits.

2012 EXHIBITIONS

The Cahoon Museum of American Art is planning another extraordinary year of exhibits in the main gallery. Since the Cahoon Museum is on the verge of a new addition, this year’s theme is Transitions. It will look at what an incredible past we have, what presently we offer to our membership and the community, and what the future holds for us all.

The year begins with Reawakenings: Emerging from Winter into Spring from February 1 to March 11, which is a collaboration with the Barnstable Land Trust. If you live on the Cape, you know how some years the shift from winter into spring is very dramatic. This exhibition looks at how artists portray that change from winter to spring.

The spring exhibit is A Family of Artists: Gruppe Family from March 13 to April 29. During the 19th century and the 20th century, the Gruppe Family contributed to the New England art scene by producing many artists including: Charles Paul Gruppe (1860-1940) and his sons Emille (1896-1978) and Karl (1893-1982). This exhibition will look at their colorful careers and how they influenced each other.

The next exhibition, from May 1 - June 9 is called Portraying African Americans with Respect: Thomas Waterman Wood, William Sidney Mount and George Caleb Bingham. Shortly after the Civil War, there was a group of artists who treated African Americans with respect and showed genre scenes portraying African Americans in every day life. This exhibition will look at how they portrayed African Americans and what particular subjects they included in these scenes. The exhibition will include both paintings and prints.

Our first summer exhibition will be Italia: The Influence of Italy on American Artists. New England artists have been influenced by Italy and this exhibition will look at how that influence affects their work.

Our second summer exhibition is Come Eat at our Table: Items for the Meal from July 24 to September 16. This exhibition will be a collaboration with Cape Cod potters and craftspersons and will spotlight unique items related to a meal. In conjunction with this exhibition will be Nantucket Baskets from the Collection of Clara Hayes Barrett.

The fall exhibition will be All Hallows Eve: How Artists Portray Halloween from September 18 to November 18. In honor of Halloween, this exhibition will look at how artists portray Halloween in their work.

The year will end with Cherubs: From Imps to Angels from November 20 to December 30. In honor of Christmas, this exhibition will look at the wide variety of the portrayal of cherubs in American Art. It will include painting, sculpture and photography.

Steady Progression

Francesca Carriuolo joined the Cahoon's Board of Trustees in 2008 and was re-elected for a second term last May. As many of you know, Francesca died at the end of August, just over a month after the triumph of the Cahoon's "Shall We Dance?" gala which she had initiated and spearheaded. There is a special tribute to Francesca elsewhere in this issue of the Spyglass (see page 2). Here, speaking both personally and on behalf of the entire Board, I simply want to say how deeply we appreciated her work for the museum and how much we are going to miss her vitality and energy.

4 I also want to note that Jennifer Eplett Reilly has resigned from the Board. Jennifer lives in Baton Rouge, Louisiana; and she has found that her commitments—and especially her children's commitments—in Baton Rouge have reduced the time she can spend on the Cape each year to no more than a month. Under those circumstances, she felt that she simply could not contribute to the work of the Board in the way and at the level that she believes Board membership requires. Jennifer will continue to support the museum and work on its behalf in the ways that she can; but we are sorry that she will no longer be a member of the Board itself.

At the same time, I want to let you know that three new members were elected to the Board at its October meeting. These are Gwen Dadoly, who is Managing Director of US Trust Bank of America Private Wealth Management in Yarmouthport and who will bring to us her extensive experience on non-profit boards of directors on the Cape, Mary LeClair, a former Barnstable county commissioner (1996-2009) who was, as it turns out, a member of the Cahoon's Board back in the first years of the museum's existence, and Kevin Nolan, a potter who studied and worked with Harry Holl of Scargo Pottery and who now has his own studio Barnstable Pottery. There will be more about each of these new trustees in the next issue of the Spyglass. But I want to welcome them to the Board, and to let you know how delighted we are that they have agreed to serve. We look forward to working with them as the Cahoon moves toward its planned new addition and an exciting new phase in its history.

With regard to the addition itself, the museum appeared before a meeting of a subcommittee of the Cape Cod Commission on October 18 at which the plans for the addition were reviewed, in particular, for how well they protect an existing historic structure and for their compatibility with the County's Regional Policy Plan and with the Town of Barnstable's Local Comprehensive Plan and its municipal development bylaws. I am delighted to report that the subcommittee voted enthusiastically to approve the plans for the addition (with one condition: a final landscape plan must be submitted to the Cape Cod Commission.)

It was especially gratifying to hear JoAnne Miller Buntich, the Director of Growth Management for the Town of Barnstable, speak so warmly at the hearing about the value and importance of the Cahoon in the eyes of the town. And I also want to thank the members of the museum and the members of the museum's Board who attended the hearing in support of the museum's application. Once the full Commission ratifies the subcommittee's approval, we will have taken one more important step toward the realization of our hopes for the new addition!

The plans for the addition appear on the next page (in the Director's column). I hope that you will look at them carefully; and, following the theme of my last column, I hope that you will imagine how much the addition will do to enhance your enjoyment of the Cahoon and of the art that it puts on display (all of which you will be able to see without having to negotiate our present tortuous stairway to the second floor). You will understand why we are so excited about the prospect that the addition opens up for us and so committed to the capital campaign that will enable us to fund the construction and start to endow the museum.

Finally, I want to wish all of you the happiest of holidays as we approach first Thanksgiving and then the Christmas season. Enjoy!
